© 1996-2014, Amazon.com, Inc. or its affiliates The evil Shadow Lord is plotting to invade Deltora. I have first taken a Quest Deltora book in my school library (which I am sure it was the same for many other Australian children). The author of the Emily Rodda series is an Australian prolific writer, who published the first book of her in the 1980s. It remains one of my favorite fantasy series that I read growing. The eight books tell a story immersed in the legendary land of Deltora, where the evil Shadow Lord reigns. The main character, Lief, takes on the search for his father, to restore the seven gems of the Deltora belt, which has the power to return the shadow Ladies for the Shadowlands. It is helped by two other characters, Barda and Jasmine, since they face many challenges and threats about their research. Thus there were so many things I loved to read these books! The world building. Considering the Werenà books, it's not so long, or overly complicated (to say the late medium-degree fiction). I felt really immersed in the world in a medieval style of Deltora. I believed in it. The riddles. During many of the challenges of the focus of the characters, the puzzles are often present that they are illustrated in the book, giving the reader the possibility to solve them first. The nerd in me loved this, and added an interactivity level to the series. Characters (and their Banter). There was a depth for relationships between the three main characters, Lief, Barda and Jasmine. They playing friends who start from this research together. They were strangers thrown together due to circumstances, who felt as if they were there, even if they don't love them at the beginning. This has been much more interesting than if they were the best friends from the beginning. The suggestion of romance. Not too much, but enough between Lief and Jasmine to keep things interesting for a girl reading it. The rhythm. Rodda keeps a cracking rhythm, and the books certainly have that magic not Put-Dorable, with lots of Cliffhanger.
