Polar bears fascinated human beings from the beginning of the recorded time. The writings dating back to 57 C.E. In ancient Rome they describe flooded amphitheater where polar bears and seals were threaded against each other (not much of a fight, as is). King of ancient Egypt and primitive Norway were the first to keep polar bears prisoners, and the charm of them held through the centuries [source: international polar bears]. A terrifying version of the animal inexplicably occurs on a tropical island in the "Lost" TV series. Advertising campaigns around the world have polar bears to sell everything from bottled water to soda transport systems. A Coca-Cola advertising campaign in the 90s added "adorable" to the image of the polar bear. The ads featured a clumsy, animated cube that has filled the natural wart between polar bears and penguins to share a beautiful, cold bottle of coke. Polar bears do not have a natural affinity for penguins, since the two do not live in any of the same regions and they never see each other. But still, cute is nice. The shocking white of polar bears, ferocity and pure size make them icons of purity and power. Males can grow up to 10 feet high (3 meters) and weigh up to 1,500 pounds (680 kilograms) [Source: National Wildlife Federation]. A single bear can take a 2,500 pound walrus, and hang to the massive capture with 2-inch claws (5 centimeters). They walk hundreds of kilometers through the ice shells every winter, following their prey. In the Arctic, polar bears are at the top of the food chain, and it is not just because of their size. Thus they are well adapted to their environment that do not experience any change in body temperature for less 34 degrees Fahrenheit (min. 37 Celsius). However, the incredible survival mechanisms that let them prosper in frigid winters can turn out to be undone. Due to global warming, winters are becoming less cold and polar bears are dying. Some scientists will design that if climate trends continue, 30 percent of the current polar bear population will be swept away by 2050 [source: IUCN]. How is life for an animal that needs a cold so far to survive? We go to the Arctic and see how polar bears live on the ice. Modern zoos around the world hold polar bears, often trying to emulate their natural habitats as much as possible. A zoo is practically the only place in which it is sure that a human approaches a polar bear. With the dissolution of marine ice, polar bears are often forced to move on the earth in the hottest months. More polar bears on earth à € "in search of sustenance where their natural prey is absent à € " it means more with humans and more attacks. polar bears do not seek comparisons, but if they are hungry or feel threatened, they will kill - and eat - a human being without a second thought. If you travel in polar bear territory, you should be mentally prepared for a potential encounter. the best way to avoid these animals is to keep attractive, such as trash, food, food,remains, soap, propane containers - really, everything that smells - tightly sealed and in a place where no creature can detect them. this a little advice alone can keep you away in front of face with a hungry (read: potentially aggressive) bear bears if you stumble into a polar bear, do not panic. Stop. assess the situation. Is the animal curious? Is it predatory? or is he stressed and defensive? If the animal does not know that you are there or it seems indifferent to your presence, simply slowly again. If the bear approaches, it might try to figure out what kind of being you are, exactly. and it is when you should raise your arms, start talking calmly, low tones, all in order to make it clear to the bear that you are a human being and not a kind of greedy two-legged prey. If all the rest fails, you may need to distribute bear spray to stop a bear attack. This powerful spray is statistically proven to work better than firearms in many cases [source: outside] .still, attacks are extremely rare, and are always from a bear that is hungry or provoked [source: polar bears international.] the city that houses the most polar bears in the world, churchill, manitoba, had two people killed by polar bears in 300 years [source: polar bears international], the second attack was on a man who had meat in his pockets and happened to come on a hungry bear. put the range of the animal "(including the canada, we, the Russian, the Norwegian, the Russian and the Greenland.) the researchers have documented only 73 attacks of polar bears not prigion from 1870 to 2014. of such attacks, 20 have turned out fatal [source: ogs.] fatal encounters in northern America are much more likely to involve black or brown bears, which are more numerous and have a much wider range, and therefore, they are more likely to meet humans [source: ktuu.] tame a horse feeding it fruit and vegetables, so select the horse with an empty hand to mount it. reequip the horse with a saddle to control horse movements, then press the sneak button to disassemble the disassembled horses by feeding them gold carrots or golden apples, then feed your horses for children to grow them. It continues to find the way ice is fundamental for their daily life, the survival of the species, and if polar bears could adapt to a warmer climate. ICE STATIONALORANO ThePolar bears are well equipped to travel the frozen landscape. Their legs are almost a foot wide, with small bumps on the bottom, called papillae that help to grab the ice. Not to mention their claws, almost two inches long, which help them to entangle the ice "and their prey. In the frozen waters, the front legs act as paddle and return as thymon. While polar bears are swimmer plagues, the marine ice is essential for the journey, because it takes a lot of energy to move their bodies through the water. à € "It was found to be five times as energetchly challenging for a polar bear walking." says Bechshoft. à € "To convince the increasingly fragmented landscape of the sea ice can be energetically stressful, especially for young puppies and bears under poor body conditions that lack a good layer of insulating fat. For them, swimming in cold Arctic water brings with it the risk of hypothermia, à € "say. Discover how many polar bears left in the world. Cool napsvirtuallimages / Getty ImagesAntumAtumAtumAtum Did not skimp on the equipment of the polar bear for frigid conditions. Their super dense fur acts as insulation that prevents almost all heat losses. (male polar bears can actually overheat when they run!) Although polar bears do not generally give on ice, on a warm day, the ice of the sea serves as a cool spot for nap. à € " Cross the polar bears that sleep (heavy!) On the sea the ice north of Svalbard a handful of times. On a warm day, bears can be opened on his stomach on the ice, trying to dissipate some of the excess heat », says Bechshoft. Most of the time they sleep in a shallow hole in the snow and use their front leg or a piece of ice as a pillow. The pillows. Frozen cynnespolari bears are a strong swimmers, but not fast enough to catch their main source of food Engrave and beard. Therefore, sea ice is essential for polar bears to be used as a platform to hunt seals. The seals cut the breathing holes in the ice and when they open air, the waiting Polar Bear captures the dinner. Other times, sealed, crucible on the top of the ice, allowing the Polar bear an opportunity to persecute and kill it. The seals are the first choice of Polar Bear food, because they have a thick layer of fat and are calorie-weight. Without marine ice for a hunting platform, polar bears do not have access toà € "The lack of seals means leaner bears that produce less smaller puppies, à € " Bechshoft notes. à € "A polar bear can eat from 10 to 20 percent of its body weight on its own lap, and on average it must ingest the calorie equivalent to an adult anellated seal for 1 to 1.5 weeks to survive long term, à€ " Dices.Melting CourtshipuntedDuck / Getty Polate Bears Islands are alone, except for mating and parenting. In the spring, the males begin to smell for the females, following closelyThe smell that the female leaves on the marine ice through the sweat glands under the legs. Once they are found, it's a brief story of love. They could spend a week to know each other before mating. After that, the male goes away, and the female continues to hunt seals alone, " says Elisabeth Kruger, Senior Program Officer, Arctic fauna, World Wildlife Fund. But, if the sea ice fragments, the scent of a female becomes more difficult and difficult to follow for the male. Marine ice is just as vital for a bear to get pregnant. Kruger says that the pregnant females must eat enough seals within four months from the pair to get pregnant and give birth to a puppy or puppies. Plars in the garden a hungry polar bear is not picky. À «They will try to eat anything you seem to smell of food," says Kruger. But even when they find other sources of food, such as the eggs of snow geese, they do not have a sufficient caloric content to fill the belly of a polar bear. À «With the decline in marine ice of about 4.6% every ten years, some polar bears on the southern edges of the species spend five to six months on the mainland, with very few seals to eat. . With no marine ice and seals, polar bears are left looking for other sources of food, "says Kruger. À «This can lead them to the community, where waste dumps, sled dog areas and food deposits for humans offer easy collection." À «It's not a good scenery for anyone. À «COMMUNITY. GOVERNMENT AND WWF are working together to keep both» disappeared marine iceVGENY555 / Getty Ice, the polar bears hunt, mate and sleep on marine ice, but it is not just an icy platform. À «Marine ice is absolutely essential for the daily survival of polar bears," says Kruger. À «It is an entire ecosystem inhabited by plankton and microorganisms, which support a rich food chain that nourishes seals, which in turn become prey of polar bears. It is the foundation itself and the distinctive feature of the Arctic marine ecosystem, "says Kruger. However, marine ice is disappearing to an alarming rate, especially in the Arctic. À «The rapid loss of marine ice is the main threat to the long-term survival of polar bears.à € Our addiction to fossil fuels and the consequent climate change is causing a 13% drop every ten years in the surface of the ice Marini. "says Bechshoft. When polar bears spend more long periods looking for food, their health and that of their puppies resent. À «The unhealthy bears can mean lower reproduction rates, greater mortality of puppies," and, finally, local extinction. The main causes of death for puppies are the lack of food or lack of fat in mothers ", says Kruger. "We expect that the population of polar bears will decrease due to the loss of the habitat of marine ice". What can we do? The decline of the population of polar bears is not only an estimate. «In the last 30 years, Hudson's western bay has lost 30% of itswhile the population of southern Beaufort has decreased by 50%, says Bechshoft. "Scientists predict that as the Arctic continues to warm, two-thirds of the world's polar bears could disappear by this century. Dr. Bechshoft says reducing greenhouse gas emissions in the near future will help, but fighting climate change is the most important factor in protecting polar bears and ensuring their survival for generations to come. "The most important step you can take is to vote and speak, vote with the climate in mind, anyway, anyway".You can also make a donation to Polar Bears International and share these 12 lovely photos of polar bears to raise awareness about their plight.
