Clarke, published in 1956. This novel is a complete rewrite of its preceding against falling at night, the first novel by Clarke, who had been published in the Startling Stories magazine in 1948 after John W. Campbell JR ., Director of Astounding Science Fiction, had refused, according to Clarke. Several years later, Clarke revised his novel widely and renamed the city and stars. The new version was destined to show what he had learned to know writing, and about the processing of information. The main differences are in single scenes and in the details of its contrasting civilizations of Diaspar and Lys. Against the fall at night he remained quite popular to stay in print after the city and the stars had been published. In introduction to it Clarke told the anecdote of a psychiatrist and patient who admitted to discussing with a day of therapy, without realizing it when one was to read a novel and one another. SYNOPSIS SETTING The city and the stars takes place a billion years in the future, in the city of Diaspar. At this point, the Earth is so old that the oceans went and the humanity is almost completely on the left. As for the people of Diaspar they know, their is the only city on the planet. The city of Diaspar is completely closed. No one came into or left the city all time anyone can remember, and all in Diaspar has an instinctive insular conservatism. The story behind this point of venturing out of the city tells of a breed of ruthless invaders who returns to beat humanity from the stars to the earth, and then made a bargain that humanity could live if they never left the planet. In the Diaspar, the entire city is managed by the central computer. Not only is the city repaired by the machines, but the people are created by machines as well. The computer creates bodies for the people of Diaspar to live in and shops their minds in his memory, at the end of their lives. At any time, only a small number of these people are actually lived in Diaspar. The rest are stored in computer memory banks. All the existing people of Diaspar had passed "lives" inside Diaspar except a person é alvin, the protagonist of this story. He is one of only a small number of "unique users", different from everyone else in the daspar, not only because he has no screw to remember, but because instead of fearing the outside, he feels in duty to leave. Alvin has just come to the age in which he is considered grown, and is putting all the energies of him in an attempt to find a way out. In the end, a character called Khedron the jester helps Alvin use the central computer to find a way out of the city of Diaspar. This involves the discovery that in the remote past, Diaspar was linked to other cities from an underground transport system. This system still exists even if the terminal was covered and sealed with only a secret left input. Alvin's search once outside Diaspar, Alvin finds that other human settlement remains on earth. In contrast to technological diaspar, Lys is a vast green oasis against the desert mountains around the world. The people of her are not stored and recreated technologically, but naturally conceive, they were born, age and die. They rejected the Hyper-Advanced Technology of Diaspar in favor of an almost agricultural existence, with the machines used only Save-work purposes. The people of Lys have worked to perfect the art of the mind; they are telepaths, able to communicate with each other on great distances and without words. Alvin continues his research until he discovers discovers The truth of why the people of Diaspar are so frightened by the external universe and because Lys is so fear of space trips and mechanical things. In the Lys it goes on a trip with a young man named Hilvar who becomes her friend, and see a luminous sign, who decide to investigate. And she brings them to Shalmirane, the remains of the fortress, where the invaders were fought with the weapons out unimaginable, and there they encounter an extraterrestrial creature with a strange robot. The creature is the last survivor of a religious cult that dates back to the time of the galactic empire. The robot was the fellow of the founder, the "master", which came with his followers on earth at the end of his life. Alvin Hilvar are able to understand the content of religion, except that refers to "great beings" they left, but the return will be one day. Alvin persuade the creature lend him the robot, claiming that the master wanted to see how things were developing all over the world. The master had, though, prohibited the robot to give any information to everyone, so Alvin does not learn anything. Alvin indicates the robot to ignore his supplications to bring him back to Lys, who knew the people of the Lys would lead to him with their great powers é telepathic previous 14 unique people had stayed. Alvin had been initially told that he would be free to choose whether to stay or come back, but because the people of the lys had his own insular failure, just like Diaspar, this option was no longer available. He already in the Diaspar, he seeks the help of the central computer, which exceeds the master's block on the robot producing the illusion of an apocalyptic return of great beings. This differs from the solution used in the original novel which was to create a duplicate of the robot without blocking. Alvin discoveries now learns that the master's ship is still working, buried out of diaspar. He manages to retrieve him, recover Hilvar from Lys, and travels into deep space. They meet Valamondi, a being of pure intelligence, with whom Hilvar, being telepathic like the other Lys, able to communicate and bring it back to earth. Finally, the truth of history emerges. The feared invaders, it turns out, have been a myth: Shalmirane was actually used to destroy the moon, when it became necessary to prevent the collision from the earth. Instead, the people of Diaspar and Lys are the descendants of those human beings that deliberately removed from the universe in the refusal of the largest scientific project in history: the creation of a disembodied intellect. The first attempt had created a powerful but crazy being, the crazy mind. The crazy mind had devastated the galaxy and its civilizations, before being imprisoned in an "strange artificial star" called the Black Sun Vanamonde is the second, successful experiment of the ancient empire: a being of pure intelligence, immensely old, immensely powerful, able to move instantly at any spacea but completely infant and sophisticated point. Last destiny of Vanamonde, he created Hilvar, is to fight the crazy mind, when he escapes his prison at the end of time. After this, most of the galactic empire had left our galaxy, leaving only a few scattered. This start from the galaxy, leaving Vanamonde, it was because the contact had been done with one, species of intelligent extraterrestrials "very strange and very large", which urgently called them to the other side of the universe. Alvin's findings bring up Diaspar with Lys. He then sends the ship, under the command of the robot, to look for long lost people of the empire. He doesn't want to look for HimselfÁ é even if there are human remains in the galaxy, they are probably decadent é and he has work to do on earth. Even the environment, which he hopes, can be revived.
